Dear Veterans,

Life is not the best right now but it really has never been. We are wearing masks and staying at home all day. Today we are just thinking about ourselves and we don't think about what happened and who fought for this land years ago and right now. We are thinking more about our freedoms and rights and not the people that fought for them and protected them for years. We thank veterans for being there, our parents, our grandparents, our brothers and sisters, our friends and our amazing family. Thank you from here to California. Thank you for your service. We would not be here today without you. Your contribution to this land to help protect us. We may not be able to be together in these troubling times but that doesn't mean that we cannot say thank you for your services. You were there for us decades ago and you are still here today for us. Thank you for staying here and helping us keep our freedoms and hopes. Without hope we are the most vulnerable that we can be, even if we had everything in the world we could still be beat if we lose our hope. You have been here to keep us safe and hopeful. We can not thank you enough. "America without her soldiers is like God without his angels, nothing." said Claudia Pemberton. Without you we may not be here today and you have made our lives more relaxed and calming. Thank you for this life that you have fought for and let us live. We all keep saying thank you for your service but that is so glad so I thought of doing something different. When asking one of my peers what they thought of veterans and people in the army, he said " I respect them a lot, my grandpa was a veteran, he was in the army between Korean and Vietnam, so I really respect them and I like that they should get a lot of respect. My grandpa, uncle and neighbor are all army vets." These words have stayed with me for the past few weeks. I know that in writing it can be really hard to show my gratitude. Thank you for being there when we needed you most and when the world needed you most.

Sincerely,

Us
